

Schemes, secrets, ambitions, and misunderstandings ... get a clue!

Jane Austen's novel Emma has all the ingredients of a timeless story—plus it's a Regency-era study of women and power! The book has been popular for 200 years and has been adapted many times for television, movies (including Clueless), and new media (the web series Emma Approved).

Take a look at Emma with the Jane Austen Society of North America (JASNA) by signing up for the

J. David Grey Young Writers' Workshop.

Our workshop program, open to all 8th through 11th graders in D.C., Maryland, and Virginia, includes:

- Monthly webinars through summer 2016
- Regular email updates for a more in-depth study of the characters
- Half-day workshop to talk with students from around the area
- Writing assignment on the big day
- The Joan Austen-Leigh Prizes
- Swag
- A chance to win an invitation to an event at JASNA's 2016 conference!

The workshop will be held in the Washington, DC area in September 2016.

There are no fees and no eligibility requirements for 8th-11th grade students—if you're interested, you're in! Individual students are welcome to sign up, and teachers can incorporate YWW activities into programs for an entire class.
