

How to Fold a Letter in Jane Austen's Time

that any day, to consult about a proposed alteration of the Maidstone Road, in which the ladies are very much interested. Sir Brooke comes here in the morning & they are to be joined by Mr. Secker at Ashford. - The loss of the Concert will be no great evil to the Society. - We shall be a party of three Ladies therefore - & to meet three Ladies. - What a convenient Carriage Henry's is, to his friend in general! - Who has it next? - I am glad William's going is voluntary, & on no worse grounds. An inclination for the Country is a venial fault. - He has more of Cooper than of Johnson in him, founder of Sorrow House & Blankwell.

 I have been thinking of writing you for some time but have been so busy that I could not find time to do so. I am now in the country and have been so long that I have not had time to write you. I am now in the country and have been so long that I have not had time to write you. I am now in the country and have been so long that I have not had time to write you.

than of the full tide of human Distraction at Charing Cross. - Oh! I have more of such sweet flattery from Miss Sharp! - She is an excellent kind friend. I am read & admired in Ireland too. - There is a Mr. Fletcher, the wife of a judge, an old lady & very good & very clever, who is all curiosity to know about me - what I am like & so forth. - I am not known to her by name, however. This comes through Mr. Carrick, not through Mr. Gore - You are quite out there. - I do not despair of having my picture in the Exhibition at last! - all while & red, with my Head on one side; - or perhaps I may marry young Mr. Dabbling. - I suppose in the mean time I shall see dear Henry a great Letters were charged by the size of the sheet and were expensive to post. Therefore, the writer often covered the entire sheet except the address area.
